REFUGEES IN THAILAND

Following the Ministry of Interior decision in late January to divert asylum seekers arriving by boat to either Cambodia or Malaysia, there have been some positive developments:

- Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi reaffirmed Thailand's commitment to the principle of first asylum.
- The UNHCR and the Thai have agreed to relocated all new Vietnamese boat arrivals to a site on the Thai-Cambodian border.
- "Pushoffs" are still conducted, but with care to repair and reprovision boats in an effort to avoid loss of life.
- Some boats, particularly those carrying infirm, aged or ill passengers are allowed to land.

The crisis remains, however. The Thai Prime Minister has asked that we increase resettlement of refugees. The FY-89 budget proposes reductions. Moreover, an increasing number of recent arrivals likely will not qualify as refugees under U.S. law, thus contributing to the residual population which now accounts for nearly 50% of the population of first asylum camps in Thailand (approximately 117,000).
