Thank you for your note to the Chief of Staff and for your inquiry.

I have reviewed the President's remarks regarding Irish signers of the Declaration of Independence, and it appears that he has said on a couple of occasions that nine of the Declaration's signers claimed Irish ancestry and four were Irish-born. That is, four of the nine signers were actually Irish-born. The four include the three men you mentioned and Charles Thomson, ~~the~~ attesting secretary, who signed the document, ~~although he is not routinely listed among its official signatories, because he was not a delegate to the Continental Congress which produced the Declaration.~~ The ~~remaining~~ five individuals -- Charles Carroll, Thomas Lynch, Thomas McKean, George Read and Edward Rutledge -- were not born in Ireland, but were of Irish ancestry. It may interest you to know that Thomson was born in Derry in 1730, and that the printer of the Declaration, John Dunlap of Philadelphia, was from Strabane.

I hope that this information is clarifying. A copy of the President's message for St. Patrick's Day, 1987 is enclosed for you.

With best wishes,

Regrettably, I must tell you that the heavy demands of my schedule make it impossible to accept your kind invitation. It would be hard to find a worthier cause than that of honoring those who defend this great nation in the world's finest Navy.

Dear Mr. Fuentes:

Thank you for your recent message.

I appreciate your sending me a copy of the letter from Congressman Claude Pepper of Florida. As Congressman Pepper states, Jorge Roblejo Lorie's life-long commitment to humanitarian causes, especially the cause of freedom for Cuban political prisoners, has been extraordinary. He clearly represents the values of individual liberty and personal courage that we, as Americans, must continue to embrace.

Dear Helen:

Thank you for your kind words and for your invitation.

I cannot tell you what an honor it would be to join you in Seattle on "Scoop Jackson Day." May 31, 1987 would have been Scoop's 75th birthday and thus a fitting opportunity to pay tribute to his life's work.

Regrettably, the demands of my schedule keep me from attending this event. My praise for this great man remains today at that highest level of which I spoke before the Senate on that dark September day some three and one-half years ago.

Henry M. Jackson spoke for all America. He carried for days beyond count the conscience of an entire nation across his shoulders on that Senate floor. A man uniquely humble yet strong, he had a clear view of this country's mission and the uncommon ability to lead it to a better future.

Both Joy and I join you in spirit, Helen, as you celebrate the life of this great man -- Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson -- and honor his innumerable contributions to this nation.

Dear Bob:

Many thanks for your kind message and offer of assistance.

This job does have an imposing agenda, even a bit intimidating at times. As such, the support and friendship of a fellow Tennessean like you is all the more gratifying and encouraging.

Warm regards.

Dear Jack:

Thank you for your kind words.

I remember well those days of more peaceful news conferences which ended promptly when Merriman Smith signaled they ought to end. As always, your advice is sound. Maybe we should re-run some news clips for the press so they can see what they look and sound alike. Really it's not bad entertainment -- a little like watching people getting on and off the New York subway during rush hour. I'm afraid that unless the President turns around and actually races out of the room, it will not stop.

Nonetheless, you can be sure I'll keep an eye out for ways to improve the situation.

Warm regards,

Sincerely,

Howard H. Baker, Jr.

Dear Charlie:

Thanks for your recent message enclosing Joel Wells' testimony before the Senate Finance Committee.

I appreciate having in hand his views on the difficult issues facing the banking industry, and have taken the liberty of sharing his remarks with the President's advisers on this subject as well. You can be sure his comments will be given careful consideration.

With so much to do here, I appreciate your keeping me informed. Support and encouragement from my home State are especially welcome. Best wishes.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Carey:

Thank you for your interesting letter. I appreciate your suggestions on how the Administration can continue moving forward over the next two years.

I agree with your generous assessments of both James Baker in his Treasury post and Secretary of State George Shultz. These two men have been a credit to this Administration and have played key roles in many of its successes. Let me emphasize that the President's vision of Cabinet government is to get the strongest advice he can from the best people available on any issue with which they have experience. Rest assured that the President gets such advice from the team he has in place. Secretary Shultz serves on the President's Economic Policy Council, and his views weigh heavily on economic issues just as Jim Baker's do on many foreign policy questions. The President believes the country is best served by having these men in their current positions.

I am grateful to have your congratulations and support in my own new post.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Howard H. Baker, Jr.

Dear Mr. Brownson:

Thank you for sending the copies of the 1987 Advance Locator.

A lot of things change when you move from one end of Pennsylvania Avenue to the other. But not my need for the Congressional Staff Directory. We still use the book constantly.
