Dear Mr. Dayton:

Thank you for your thoughtful letter of May 26 concerning our policies in Central America. This Administration shares your concern for the peoples of the region and attaches great importance to improving their economic standard of living and obtaining more freedom in their daily lives.

The crisis in Central America has its roots in a long history of social injustice, maldistribution of national income, government oppression, and closed political systems. Our policy in Central America is designed to address these problems and is guided, in part, by legislation approved by Congress in 1984 known as the Central American Democracy, Peace and Development Initiative. This legislation has four principal goals: strengthening democratic institutions and processes; arresting economic decline and promoting economic stabilization; laying the basis, through structural reform, for sustained economic growth; and increasing equity and spreading the benefits of economic growth. While the media focuses on our military assistance, our economic aid to Central America is nearly four times greater -- $746 million versus $189 million in FY 1987.

I agree with you that Nicaragua is the exception in the region but do not view it as a positive one. Unlike the progress in opening their political systems made by its neighbors, the Sandinista regime has increasingly closed its system. The State of Emergency Decree, renewed within hours after the publication of a new constitution on January 9, 1987, suspended basic liberties such as freedom of the press and effectively restrained the activities of the domestic opposition.

The 1979 revolution against Somoza was carried out by a broad-based coalition of which the Sandinistas were only one element. The United States sought to develop a positive relationship with the revolutionary government and was initially the largest bilateral aid donor, providing over $117 million by early 1981. The Nicaraguan people's hopes for democracy were dashed, however, as the Sandinistas betrayed the revolution and began working to consolidate their own power -- pushing aside the democratic members of the revolution -- and aligning themselves with the Soviet Bloc and Cuba. The Sandinistas began their military build-up long before the formation of the democratic resistance and have received Soviet Bloc military assistance totalling nearly $2 billion since 1979.

U.S. policy toward Nicaragua has four objectives: ending Sandinista support for guerrilla groups abroad; severing Nicaragua's military ties to the Soviet Bloc; reduction of Sandinista military strength to a level equal to its neighbors; and fulfillment of Sandinista promises of democracy, political pluralism and respect for human rights.

The Administration does not seek a military solution in the region. The President has strongly supported the efforts of the Contadora nations to achieve a regional peace settlement and we would welcome any agreement that achieved comprehensive, verifiable, and simultaneous implementation of the 1983 Document of Objectives. Similarly, we have welcomed the initiatives of the four Central American presidents launched in Costa Rica last February 15. We are prepared to resume direct negotiations with the Sandinistas when they enter into a serious dialogue with all elements of the opposition, including the democratic resistance. We believe the Sandinista government will not negotiate in earnest unless compelled to do so. Our aid to the resistance gives the Sandinistas an incentive to negotiate seriously.

Again, I appreciate your expressing your views on Central America. Please give my best to Carol.

Dear Mr. Ambassador:

Thank you for your letter of May 4 regarding the trade bill.

I welcome your statement that China is committed to a further expansion of bilateral trade and investment. I can assure you that the United States is equally committed to this goal. I know that the opening of your market is a difficult undertaking and I commend your government for its efforts in this regard. The growth in U.S.-China trade since 1979 has been very impressive, and the further expansion of trade and investment can only bolster the already strong ties of commerce and friendship between our two nations.

For this reason, I understand and share your concern about the dangers of protectionist trade legislation. The Administration strongly opposes legislative proposals that would reduce access to the U.S. market and constrain the President's authority over trade. We are working with Congress to ensure that these proposals are not enacted into law. I completely agree with you that the enactment of ill-conceived trade legislation could only have an adverse effect on our bilateral trade relations and squander opportunities for the further expansion of trade with China. We will do everything in our power to ensure that this does not occur.

In the past, your government has expressed concern about the application of the U.S. antidumping law to Chinese goods. To address these concerns, the President has sent to Congress a major proposal to amend the U.S. antidumping law with respect to non-market economy countries, like the People's Republic of China. The President's proposal would establish a benchmark in antidumping cases based on the price of a comparable product from the market economy with the lowest average import price in the United States. It is designed to address concerns regarding the arbitrariness and unpredictability of the non-market economy provisions of current law.

We believe that the artificial pricing approach represents the best practical solution to a difficult and controversial issue. We commend your government's decision to move to a more market-oriented economic structure and to join GATT. Nevertheless, I hope that you will understand that until Chinese prices are determined entirely by market forces, it is necessary to resort to some type of market-driven benchmark in order to determine whether sales have been made at "less than fair value" under our antidumping law. The GATT recognizes and endorses this practice. While any surrogate pricing approach to dumping necessarily involves a degree of arbitrariness, the President's proposal is highly favorable to non-market economy countries. In all cases, it would permit a non-market economy producer to sell at the same price as the most efficient market economy exporter to the United States. I believe this proposal, in fact, would permit a significant expansion of trade.

Thank you for conveying your government's views on this difficult and controversial issue. I hope that you will keep in touch as the trade bill moves forward.

Sincerely,

Howard H. Baker, Jr.

Dear Mrs. Dalby and Mrs. Henritzky:

Thank you for your message inviting the Chief of Staff to attend the 1987 Planned Parenthood Holiday Mart Patron Preview Party.

Your invitation is appreciated, but the heavy demands of Mr. Baker's schedule make it impossible for him to accept. However, he asked me to thank you for your kindness and send you his best wishes.

Thank you for your kind invitation. I was honored that you thought of asking me to meet with you while you were in Washington.

Regrettably, the heavy demands of my schedule forced me to decline your kind offer. Please know, however, that you have my best wishes for your continued success.

Warm regards.
