Dear Senator Baker:

I have always been one of your most enthusiastic supporters, even prior to my meeting you through our mutual friend, Bunny Lasker. Now, like all Americans, I am extremely pleased and enthusiastic that the President has asked you to be Chief of Staff. I realize that you accept this difficult assignment at great personal sacrifice.

This is a great step forward in attempting to put the Iran mess behind us. I hope this will be followed by other important decisions that will restore worldwide confidence that this present Administration is up to the leadership necessary to maintain the momentum starting with your appointment. It is my belief that the important Cabinet members who chose to "distance themselves" must be rapidly supplanted. Secretary of State Shultz should be replaced by Dr. Henry Kissinger. This move would have considerable worldwide appeal. It would convey the signal that foreign affairs are a Number 1 priority. It would also be well received if Secretary of Defense Weinberger was replaced. I hope that something in these areas is rapidly implemented because all are concerned including our friendly allies about our sorry showing in Iceland and the embarrassing errors made in the Middle East.

Once again, my personal congratulations and good wishes to you. Our country is far better off starting today than it was last week.

Sincerely,

Tennessee Demos Join Baker Praise

By JEFF POWELL
N-FP Assistant City Editor

Tennessee Democrats dragged out seldom-used accolades Friday to praise the ascension of former U.S. Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker to the post of White House chief of staff.

The plaudits flowed freely from state congressional quarters after the White House announcement that former Chief of Staff Donald Regan had stepped down and Tennessee's Baker is stepping in as of Monday.

Mr. Baker, who was first elected to the Senate in 1966 and who served as both GOP minority and majority leader in the chamber during his 18-year tenure in the chamber, gave up his seat in 1984, ostensibly to make another run for the presidency. He unsuccessfully sought the nation's highest office in 1980.

Mr. Baker said he has now given up hopes of becoming the nation's chief executive. Joining him on the White House staff will be Tom Griscom, former News-Free Press political writer.

Another Chattanooga native is also currently working at the White House. David Abshire, former U.S. ambassador to NATO, was named by President Reagan as his administration coordinator for the Iran/Contra investigation.

While the Democrats have been vocally critical of much of the GOP Reagan administration's activities, they were unanimous in praising the latest move.

"This is the absolute best choice the president could make," Sen. Albert Gore Jr., a Democrat and the state's junior senator, said of Mr. Baker's selection as President Reagan's top aide. "It will go a long way toward restoring confidence in his presidency and will reassure many in the Congress who know and greatly respect Sen. Baker's ability.

"I wholeheartedly applaud the selection," he continued.

"This was a brilliant stroke by the administration," responded Sen. James Sasser, another Democrat. "This appointment will give the White House some much needed breathing room so that it may begin the laborious task of getting back to its feet.

'Credibility' Seen In Swap Of Aides

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's appointment of former Sen. Howard Baker to replace Donald T. Regan as chief of staff is bringing praise of "instant credibility" to a White House characterized as chaotic.

One day after receiving the Tower commission report faulting his secret arms sales to Iran and his laid-back management style, Regan on Friday made the dual announcement of Regan's going and Baker's coming.

"It would have taken Howard Baker about one second to veto the arms deal with Iran," said Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., in a back-handed slap at Regan whom the Tower panel blamed for "the chaos that descended on the White House" in the dealings with Iran.

"Howard Baker has instant credibility," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas. "He understands the Congress, he's worked with members in both parties. He also understands the White House because as majority leader he did a lot of work with the Reagan White House."

Regan's departure, following weeks of pressure from first lady Nancy Reagan and members of the president's own party, came in a one-sentence signed statement: "I hereby resign as chief of staff to the president of the United States."

Regan himself did not appear in front of reporters, and a senior administration official who spoke on condition he not be named said he quit only after hearing of Baker's appointment on television. The Washington Post today quoted an official as saying Regan "blew a fuse" and "stormed out" of the White House.

The turning point for the president, who had long resisted pressure to change his chief of staff, came when Regan criticized Mrs. Reagan in a Feb. 20 staff meeting at the White House, the Post reported. The newspaper also said she helped spread the word that Baker had been picked, hastening Regan's departure.

Regan, a onetime Wall Street executive, had become one of the most strong-willed and influential White House chiefs since he switched jobs with now Treasury Secretary James Baker III for Reagan's second term.

Both Reagan and his wife said they were elated that Howard Baker was coming to the White House, with the president saying Baker would "help me organize the White House staff for an aggressive two years of work."

Mrs. Reagan, who reportedly blamed Reagan for not protecting her husband, said of Baker, "I am delighted he will be with us." The first lady's press secretary, Elaine Crispin, said the Reagans are "old friends" of Baker and his wife, Joy.

In accepting Reagan's resignation, the president said Reagan had indicated "many months ago" that he would like to return to private life.

The president said Reagan had indicated that with the release of the Tower board's report, "he felt he would like to go through with his original plans to return to private life. I am therefore accepting with regret his resignation as chief of staff, effective today."

Baker, who was Senate majority leader during the first four years of Reagan's presidency and last month reportedly turned down an offer to head the CIA, told a news conference that he took the White House job "with the full knowledge this will eliminate me as a candidate for president (in 1988). You can't do both.

"Ronald Reagan is an historic president," he said. "If we go forward, credibility will follow."

Before selecting Baker, Reagan was rebuffed by longtime associate, former U.S. Sen. Paul Laxalt and by former Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis.

The president's announcement came late Friday afternoon, some 30 hours after the commission headed by former Sen. John Tower delivered a stinging critique of the White House. The report criticized the decision-making and management practices that led to the clandestine sales of U.S. arms to Iran, listed by the State Department as a "terrorist nation."

It had excoriated Reagan, saying that as one of the most powerful chiefs of staff in recent history, he should have done more to shield the president.

Earlier Friday, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater had portrayed Reagan as "rightfully angry" about the failures cited by the Tower board, and had said the president planned to move quickly to meet the problem head-on.

Reagan plans to give a nationally broadcast address to the nation sometime next week, probably Wednesday or Thursday, in which he will respond in detail to the Tower board's report.

Baker's appointment brought virtually universal praise on Capitol Hill, with compliments from both Republicans and Democrats, and from other quarters.

"It's a good beginning, but there's a long way still to go," said Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the assistant majority leader, and one of Reagan's toughest critics in Congress.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, in Hong Kong en route to a week in China, enthusiastically welcomed Baker, but also saluted Reagan as "a long-time friend."

"Howard Baker is a patriot who possesses just that combination of intellect, wisdom and savvy needed at this juncture in our nation's history," Shultz said.

Critics on Capitol Hill had urged Reagan's ouster to give the White House a fresh start.

It was not clear immediately whether there would be a staff shakeup beyond Reagan. Other administration leaders, including Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, were criticized by the Tower commission, but less harshly than Reagan.

Baker, a 61-year-old Tennessean, is a onetime political rival of Reagan's who competed for the 1980 Republican presidential nomination but eventually endorsed Reagan.

Baker was first elected to the Senate in 1966. He was elected minority leader in 1977 and was chosen majority leader when Republicans took over control of the Senate in 1981.

He retired from the Senate in 1984, saying he would be more free as a private citizen to devote the time to another try for the White House in 1988.

Baker first gained national attention as a member of the Senate committee that investigated the Watergate scandals that drove President Nixon from office.

Fitzwater Says Reagan Ready, Eager To Get 'Back On Course'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan, "rightfully angry about the mismanagement" of the White House portrayed in the Tower Commission report, arranged a series of meetings this weekend to plan the counterattack.

President Reagan, who told GOP congressional leaders in a meeting Friday morning that he was once again "pumping iron," is expected to discuss the aftermath of the Tower Commission report in his weekly radio address today. He also plans to respond to the devastating report in a speech to the nation Wednesday.

Republican congressional leaders emerged from a White House meeting Friday saying Reagan accepted the blunt criticism of the report, which pinned the blame on chief of staff Donald Regan for the "chaos that descended on the White House" once the Iran-Contra scandal broke.

The embattled White House chief of staff resigned later Friday in a one-line letter to the president and was replaced by former Senate Republican leader Howard Baker, who put aside his presidential aspirations to accept the post.

The president got more bad news Friday evening — an ABC News poll showed Reagan's approval rating fell to a near-record low of 44 percent in the wake of the commission's report, a drop of 6 percentage points from mid-January.

The 44 percent rating is the lowest mark Reagan has received in the poll since the Iran-Contra scandal surfaced in November and is only 2 percentage points above his lowest score, recorded during a recessionary period in January 1983.

The White House battle plan still was evolving, but these elements emerged:

- Calls to key leaders of the two congressional investigations to pledge complete cooperation with their upcoming probes.

- The ouster of Regan as the keystone of a White House shake-up aimed at overhauling the management style that the commission said got the administration in trouble.

- A round of meetings and luncheons at the White House over the weekend with those politically and personally close to both the president and first lady Nancy Reagan to find the proper theme for next week's counterattack.

- A nationwide television speech, likely Wednesday, where Reagan can use his talents as the "great communicator" to try to re-establish the high presidential approval rating by the American people that existed before the scandal.

A day after the report hit the nation's capital, the White House was scrambling to recover from its crude depiction that Rep. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio, described as "a report about a president out of touch and a presidency out of control."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said that immediately after receiving the panel's report Thursday, the president began studying it and phoned Sens. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, and Warren Rudman, R-N.H., the leaders of the Senate special committee, and Reps. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., and Dick Cheney, R-Wyo., leaders of the House unit to "reiterate his cooperation."

Fitzwater said Reagan is "determined and eager to set the administration back on course."

"The president is rightfully angry about the mismanagement described in this report and he intends to make changes as soon as possible," Fitzwater said. "The president is engaged in a critical review period."

Assistant GOP leader Alan Simpson of Wyoming said the president's view of his worst political crisis had changed to one of realism.

Simpson, describing Reagan's mood in the 30-minute meeting, said "There was not a defensiveness. There was not a willingness to scapegoat. ... He knows he has a responsibility and he admits that."

Dear Howard,

I, for one, am grateful that you have agreed to accept your new position because the President needs you in this spot and also I know that you can and will do your best.

Perhaps you can cool the media a little bit. It is obvious to me that the treatment given the President is far more vicious than was given, for example, to Eisenhower for the U 2 incident, or to Carter for the ill-fated rescue attempt. It would be wonderful if all the media could be just a little more even-handed in its treatment of this President.

I know that you have the ability to get at the truth and also to present it to both the President and to the public in a clear, concise manner. I do not minimize the Iran affair. It is most unfortunate that the overall reaction of the media and certain Democrats is so excessive and grossly unfair.

I hope that you will convey Anne's and my very best wishes to Joy and know that you both are in our prayers.

Sincerely,
